AT THE AUDITORIUM. John Mason Makes Screen Debut in Jim the Penman.

The eminent dramatic star, John Mason, one of the last of the important legitimate actors of the modern stage to be converted to the screen, makes his first appearance in motion pictures in the Famous Players Film company's five-part photo production of the international adramatic triumph, Jim the Penman, on the Paramount programme at the Auditorium today and Saturday. This is one of the most notable characterizations of the present dramatic era. The role is forcefully suggested by the vigorous art of Mr. Mason. The play reveals in an intensely dramatic manner the extremes to which a strong man who loves devotedly will go toward winning the wom-an of his heart. When she indicates her preference for a younger suitor, he applies a remarkable talent of penman-ship which he possesses and writes a note to the woman and the other man purporting to be an interchange of correspondence between them, and signed with their names. Thus the woman reads that the man has learned to love another and the man reads that his flancee would thank him to release her from their engagement, as there is another she cares more for. Both too proud to reply, their relations abruptly terminate and in time Jim the Penman wins her for his own. The talent so amazingly proven he now diverts toward financial ends, and assisted by a foreign bank agent, he be-comes notorious as the master forger of the age. From this time the drama develops with strength and cumula-tive interest until with the passage of years a romantic interest is introduced by the love of his daughter for a friend of his defeated rival. The chain of circumstances that emanate from this incident bring Jim's early rival again into the scenes of action, and through a casual remark he and Jim's wife suddenly learn of the manner in which their early engagement was years before broken. The overpowering climax that follows is one of the most intense expositions of pantomime ever wit-nessed on the screen, the result of which it would be unfair to disclose.

This notable play by Sir Charles E. Young, the distinguished English dramatist, created a veritable sensation at the time of its production on the stage, and throughout the English-speaking world was recorded as one of the most powerful dramas of the contemporary stage. On the screen it loses none of its force, and gains tremendously in pictorial and scenic value. John Ma-son's introduction to the motion picture public by the Famous Players Film company is in every manner a most auspicious one. Supporting Mr. Mason in the cast are Frederick Perry, who appeared in the stage production of On Trial, and Marguerite Leslie, leading woman in The Outcast.

William Farnum in The Wonderful Adventure, Six-Part Fox Feature, Today-Keith Vaudeville.

As John Demarest, a wealthy New York contractor and business man, he falls victim to the wiles of Mazora, a beautiful adventuress.

Through her he becomes addicted to the use of drugs.

Ne neglects his wife and child.

Ne neglects his wife and child. His business is on the verge of ruin. At this stage of his affairs he meets John Stanley (also played by Farnum), a western mining engineer, and his exact counterpart in face and figure. Demarest, half insane through the use of Mazora's drugs, conceives the fantastic idea of having this man, so wonderfully like him in every way, take his place in the world, and thus give him opportunity to indulge in his give him opportunity to indulge in his give aim opportunity to induige in his degraded desire.

Stanley, though he revolts at such an unnatural deception, is penniless and a stranger in New York.

He is finally persuaded and the substitution is made. Demarest drops into oblivious and Stanley picks up the oblivion and Stanley picks up the scattered threads of his life, both at home and in business.

The inevitable complication ensues Demarest's wife and child, while realizing that a change has taken place, do not suspect that the husband and father is an entirely different man.

Stanley, on his part, while he tries to maintain Demarest's attitude of coldness and neglect, has fallen deeply in love with his "wife." How the vexed problem is finally solved makes a photoplay romance of entrancing power and thrilling inter-

Trapper's Revenge, Two Reels, and Other Films-Y. M. C. A. This Even-

Other Films—Y. M. C. A. This Evening.

A strong and exceedingly interesting programme of pictures are to be presented at the Colonial theatre this afternoon, and heading the list is the famous Lubin spectacle of the deep woods, entitled The Trapper's Revenge, two reels. This drama breathes of invigorating atmosphere of the pines, and the action is all spirit and strength. Virility seems to be uppermost, and because of this fact only actors of the required physique are seen. The scenery is also worthy of special mention, and the photography comes in for a share of the admiration also. Other striking features on the programme for today are Hearts to Let, Vitagraph, with a strong cast of the outcoms.

Ville Tragedy Troupe, a rollicking comedy.

There will be no picture show at the Colonial theatre is given over to the Y. M. C. A. musical course, which will present the perless Lotus Quartette, a rare combination of the best male voices, assisted by Miss Gow, Boston's famous and talented reader.

Coming Saturday to the Colonial theatre is the famous film in which is enactor of many of the world's greatest dramatic offerings. This film is entitled The Duilder of Bridges, a story too well known to need explaining. In short, the play is by Alfred Sutro, and was played by Kyrle Bellew (in which he scored his greatest triumph), which tells of a lad who steals $20,000 to pay his gambling debts and charges it to the builder of bridges. See picture for the deutern of the sutcoms.

the automobile, the testimony at the first hearing indicating that someone else than Kelly had been driving the car, says the Middletown Press. The testimony of the witnesses summoned, however, was very contradictory, and at the conclusion the true events concerning the accident were as much in the dark as ever. Stephen Cloonan of Hartford, who was in the car with Kelly at the time of the accident, testified that he was seated on the right-hand side of the car, while Kelly was on the left-hand side. The car only turned to its right-hand side. Other witnesses testified that the Other witnesses testified that the machine turned toward the left, but all summoned yesterday were agreed that the car was righted after the accident and that Kelly had been pinned beneath the car when it overturned. Dayton Baldwin, who earlier in the day had qualified as an automobile ex-pert in the superior court, told of the damage to the car and estimated the speed as in excess of 20 miles an hour How much more so, he would not say, other than that the car could have been damaged as badly as it was if it had been traveling at 30 miles an hour. the fine sunny 10 room House with The witnesses examined yesterday were Willard H. THE WAR HORSE. Why am I left upon this barren field. A horse whose master never more will why am I left upon this barren field A horse whose master never more will call. Wounded and bleeding where a cruel ball Did pierce me through; while all around me rise Moans of the dying handicapped like me? Men call it war, and claim 'tis ours to bear fleroes into the fray; and, when they fall. To agonize and suffer, e'en as they. Yet, wherefore, if there is no life beyond For such as we, should suffering be borne That calls for Christian faith and martyr's blood? Proudly we learn to step to martial notes: Madly we sniff the battle from afar; Bravely we bear a hero to the strife; Yet when he falls, though we like him are torn with murderous shot and shell and moaning lie. Why must we hear the agony and die Uncared-for where we fall? God's love enfolds. His meanest creatures; horse and man, alike, Are folded in the mantle of his care.

Are folded in the mantle of his care.

Are folded in the mantle of his care.

Oft on the battle-field man leaves us where

We dropped our burden. 'Tis a horse can teil.

Writhing in agony, why "war is hell."

A SONG FOR FALL.

What if there's Fall in the red of the thicket,
Fall in the haze on the flaw-scarred Full in the chant of the bois rous black cricket?—
Autumn's no foe to fies.

What if the year is today turning over The rich pageant-page of its gloried close? If withered brown leaves soon shall cover the clover— The garden be but one rose?

Love still goes tramping ahead, working wageless, To play at surveyor and break a new road. So in thy heart shall the Spring blossom ageless— Winter can lay no load. —Edna Mead, in New York Times.
